Dear Joel:

I want to thank you so much for talking with my Independent Living class last month. The information you shared on financing a car and how to protect a credit rating was very helpful. This topic is what former students tell me is the most beneficial when they are out on their own.

The case studies were especially meaningful and enabled the students to see how easily some bad choices can impact financial options a few years later. I also learned a lot, especially relating to how long certain information is kept in a file. We checked out your web page one day and the students thank you for helping them become more knowledgeable consumers and ultimately more financially independent.

Again, thank you, and we appreciate your time meeting with us. I hope we might be able to coordinate something similar next year.

Sincerely,
